Adrenocortical steroids, acting through the rate-limiting enzyme 11 beta-hydroxysteroid dehydrogenase (HSD), can cause net conversion of cortisol to cortisone, which subsequently binds to the G proteins. 11 beta-Hydroxysteroid dehydrogenase may be an important factor in the tonic regulation of mast cell secretory function. The isozyme of 11 beta-HSD present in mast cells, however, has never been fully characterized. We have examined this question using rat peritoneal mast cells. The levels of FAD-NADPH oxidoreductase activity were found to be increased after treatment of mast cells with 17-hydroxyprogesterone and decreased after treatment with progesterone, 11-deoxycorticosterone and corticosterone. 11 beta-Hydroxylation of 17-hydroxyprogesterone was blocked by hydrocortisone, but not by megestrol acetate or testosterone. These findings show that mast cells contain a cytosolic enzyme which is capable of 11 beta-oxidizing 17-hydroxyprogesterone. This enzyme is most likely to be a microsomal enzyme of the 11 beta-hydroxylase isoenzyme.
